The UN Security Council discusses the crisis in Arakan State. Later, UN Sec-Gen Ban Ki-moon declares the situation in Arakan State “completely unacceptable.”

UN Sec-Gen Ban Ki-moon urges the regime to “fully investigate and respond to” past and current incidents of human rights violations, including sexual violence. During his report to the UNSC on conflict-related sexual violence, the Sec-Gen noted that sexual violence was associated with “targeted violence” in Arakan State and armed conflict in Kachin and Northern Shan States.

The humanitarian crisis in Arakan State brings more death and misery amid continuing regime-imposed bans and obstacles on aid agencies.

UN Special Rapporteur on human rights in Burma Tomás Ojea Quintana warns that the consequences of aid deprivation in Arakan State could result in crimes against humanity.

The census escalates conflict in Kachin and Northern Shan States and excludes Rohingya.

The draft of a national ceasefire agreement is undermined by more Tatmadaw attacks and insistence that all armed groups come under Tatmadaw control.

NLD co-founder and Burma’s longest-serving political prisoner U Win Tin dies at 84.

The regime jails another journalist, while nine more people are charged or jailed for protesting.

UNSC, UNSG, Special Rapporteur express alarm over Arakan State crisis

On 7 April, UN Special Rapporteur on human rights in Burma Tomás Ojea Quintana warned that the absence of aid workers in Arakan State could have dire consequences, and that their removal, the latest in a “long history of discrimination and persecution,” “could amount to crimes against humanity.”¹ This was quickly rejected by President Thein Sein’s spokesman Ye Htut.²

On 17 April, UN Sec-Gen’s Special Advisor for Burma Vijay Nambiar briefed the UN Security Council (UNSC) on the crisis. During the meeting, US Ambassador to the UN Samantha Power urged the regime to intervene in Arakan State to prevent violence and facilitate the return of “the critically needed humanitarian presence.”

On 25 April, UN Sec-Gen Ban Ki-moon declared that the situation in Arakan State was “alarming” and the events in Akyab [Sittwe] were “completely unacceptable” at the first session of the Partnership Group on Burma in New York. He reminded the regime that they had a “solemn duty” to ensure the safety and protection of all civilians in Burma, “no matter what their religious or ethnic affiliation.” He urged the regime to provide “wider humanitarian access” and said the return of Médecins Sans Frontières (MSF) to Arakan State would need to be part of that process. He warned the regime that if the regime continued to tolerate impunity for human rights violations against Rohingya, they could face international consequences. [See below, UN Sec-Gen urges Burma to investigate sexual violence]

Situation in Arakan State dire

Despite the regime Health Ministry’s claims of being able to fill the healthcare void left by the evacuation of aid workers from Akyab [Sittwe], Arakan State, after anti-Rohingya mob attacks in March, reports emerged throughout April about health services being “severely hampered.” This dire situation included lack of access to aid for more than 800,000 people in Arakan State, mainly Muslim Rohingya, including 140,000 IDPs experiencing water and food shortages in IDP camps.

In early April, three deaths in Thaechaung IDP camp were reported and attributed to lack of medical care that resulted from the expulsion of Médecins Sans Frontières (MSF) in February and the evacuation of INGOs in the March riots. The camp near Akyab is inhabited by many Rohingya.

On 2 April, UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) reported that 300 severely malnourished children in Akyab were unable to receive therapeutic treatment and 1,300 metric tons of food needed to be distributed in Arakan State to replenish diminishing stores. On 8 April, UNOCHA revealed that emergency medical cases were not being referred to hospitals in Arakan State because NGOs could not obtain travel authorizations or hospital spaces for patients.

US, UK, UN urge return of aid agencies

The US and the UK also weighed in to express alarm and urged the regime to facilitate the return of aid workers. The US State Department including the US Embassy in Rangoon, UNOCHA, UK Department for International Development (DFID) and UN Resident and Humanitarian Coordinator in Burma Renata Dessalienen all made statements, some repeatedly. In similar notable exchanges:
• 7 April: UK Foreign & Commonwealth Office (UK FCO) Minister of State Hugo Swire summoned Burmese Ambassador to the UK Kyaw Zwar Minn to urge the regime to restore humanitarian access to vulnerable communities and ensure the safety of aid workers and communities in Arakan State.¹³

• 10 April: US Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs Daniel R. Russel conveyed the US’s “strong hope and expectation” for aid organizations to safely resume work in Arakan State during talks with officials, including President Thein Sein, in Naypyidaw.¹⁴

Regime promises cooperation but bars return of MSF and Malteser International

Despite the obvious urgent need for aid [See above, Situation dire, international community urges return of aid agencies], the regime remained adamant in blocking aid to Arakan State.¹⁵ On 3 April, Arakan State spokesperson Win Myaing said aid groups would be allowed to return to Arakan State if they still had an MoU, but that Malteser International would still be barred “because the local [Buddhist Rakhine] people have protested against them for some time.”¹⁶

On 9 April, state-run newspaper New Light of Myanmar released the findings of the regime’s commission charged with investigating the violence that occurred on 26-27 March in Akyab [Sittwe], Arakan State [See March 2014 Burma Bulletin] and said that:¹⁷

• Malteser International had removed the Buddhist flag from its office building (in Akyab) to avoid a misrepresentation of the organization’s values.
• The incident was used as an “excuse” to start the violence.
• The Arakan State authorities’ response to the violence had been “sluggish”.
• Twelve people were detained and questioned about their role in the mob violence.

Commission chairman Maj Gen Maung Maung Ohn said plans were being made for international aid groups to resume their work in Arakan State.¹⁸ However, on 23 April, the regime’s Emergency Coordination Center (ECC) – run by regime and local Arakan State authorities – confirmed that Médecins Sans Frontières (MSF) and Malteser International would not be able to resume services in Arakan State.¹⁹ The ECC also said that it would not allow UN and other INGOs to operate in Arakan State unless they provided detailed information of their planned work.²⁰ On 22 April, it was reported that only 11 out of 23 UN agencies and INGOs were able to resume their operations in Arakan State.²¹

Anti-Muslim violence continues in Burma

Two incidents of sectarian violence broke out in Burma in April. On 4 April, in Rangoon’s Hlegu Township, a dispute between two Muslims and a Buddhist incited a Buddhist mob to destroy a home, throw stones at Muslims-owned buildings, and attack and raid a mosque.²² Five people, and policemen, were injured in the violence.²³ The Hlegu Township authorities imposed a 6pm to 6am curfew.²⁴ On 6 April, state-run media reported that 13 people had been arrested in connection with the clash.²⁵

On 18 April, police reported that they had taken no action against any of the attackers.

INSIDE BURMA

Census used to justify abuses, exclusion, and escalated conflict

Burma’s first census in three decades, which was funded by the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and ran from 30 March – 10 April, was used to justify human rights abuses, exclusion, and escalated conflict.

In Kachin and Shan States, the Tatmadaw launched additional attacks in April, resulting in civilian abuses. [See below, Census: A guise for Tatmadaw to escalate attacks in Kachin and Shan States, and Regime takes census by force in Kachin and Shan States]

In Arakan State, problems persisted following the regime’s decision not to allow Rohingya to self-identify in late March [See March 2014 Burma Bulletin]. Regime officials and Tatmadaw soldiers intimidated and abused Rohingya. [See below, Regime census fails to meet international standards; Rohingya harassment ensues]

Complaints also came in from other states. Union National Development Party (UNDP) Chairman Abu Tahay said that Rohingya living in Rangoon were not allowed to register as Rohingya. Chin Human Rights Group received complaints from ethnic Chin in several townships who said that enumerators had not asked them about their ethnicity or religion.

First draft of national ceasefire agreement is jeopardized by more attacks in Kachin and Northern Shan States

In April, the regime and the ethnic armed groups’ peacemaking teams drafted a tentative nationwide ceasefire to be finalized in May. However, the intense fighting in Kachin and Shan States which began on 10 April undermined the ethnic team’s trust in the regime’s commitment to reach a genuine ceasefire agreement.

From 5-8 April, representatives from 21 ethnic armed groups met with Tatmadaw and regime officials involved in the negotiations to draw up a draft nationwide ceasefire at the Myanmar Peace Center (MPC) in Rangoon. On 8 April, at the conclusion of the meeting, representatives from 21 ethnic armed groups and regime officials involved in the negotiations issued a joint statement saying they had agreed “in principle” on a first draft of a single text for the nationwide ceasefire peace agreement.

The statement did not acknowledge that negotiations had stalled over disagreements in terminology. MPC special adviser Hla Maung Shwe admitted there were disputes over the use of the terms “civil war,” “ceasefire,” “federal,” and “in accordance with the current law.” Ethnic armed groups voiced their support for a “genuine federal union.” However, Tatmadaw Commander-in-Chief Sr Gen Min Aung Hlaing, during a meeting on 6 April in Lashio, Shan State, reiterated the Tatmadaw’s desire to

\section*{Census: A guise for Tatmadaw to escalate attacks in Kachin and Northern Shan States}

During late March and early April, the Tatmadaw heavily increased militarization in Kachin State under the guise of preparing to help conduct the census in Kachin Independence Army (KIA)-controlled areas.\textsuperscript{41} [See above Census used to justify abuses, exclusion and escalated conflict] The increased military presence led to a series of attacks by the Tatmadaw against the KIA and the Ta'ang National Liberation Army (TNLA) in Kachin and Shan States. Despite overwhelming evidence to the contrary, on 11 April, President Thein Sein’s spokesman Ye Htut said he had received no details of fighting in Kachin State.\textsuperscript{42} On 21 April, Ye Htut reiterated Naypyidaw’s outrageous claim that the Tatmadaw only fought to defend itself.\textsuperscript{43}

Regime takes census by force in Kachin and Shan States

In Kachin and Shan States, increased fighting resulted in the displacement of civilians and a lack of access to aid and healthcare. Despite the Kachin Independence Organization (KIO) rejecting the regime’s request to collect census data in KIA-controlled areas in March, the regime refused to take ‘no’ for an answer.63 On 2 April, Tatmadaw troops arrived in Man Wein Village, Mansi Township, Kachin State, and threatened to take the census by force.64 Throughout the first half of April, Tatmadaw

Civilians suffer during Tatmadaw offensives in Kachin and Shan States

The Tatmadaw’s increased offensives against the KIA resulted in widespread displacement of civilians and human rights abuses in Kachin and Northern Shan States.

- 10 April: Two Tatmadaw soldiers from LIB 320 raped a 17-year old girl in Ka Gam Village, Momauk Township, Kachin State.
- 10 April: Three hundred residents of U Yang and Nam Hka Pa Villages were displaced when Tatmadaw troops attacked KIA positions close to Mai Ja Yang, Mansi Township, Kachin State.
- 10-11 April: Tatmadaw troops shelled Lagat Yang IDP camp, Mansi Township, Kachin State, injuring a 40-year-old Shan villager, forcing 800 IDPs to leave, and causing over 2,000 Shan, Kachin, and Palaung villagers to flee to Namkham Township, Shan State and across the China-Burma border. Once across the border, Tatmadaw troops continued to target the villagers with small arms fire and artillery shells, wounding two civilians.
- 11 April: Tatmadaw troops shot and injured two civilians and fired mortar rounds in Maw Swi Awng Lawt Village, Momauk Township, Kachin State.
- 12 April: Tatmadaw troops arrested 30 Kachin civilians and transported them to a base in Hpawng Township, Kachin State.
- 16 April: One thousand Shan villagers near Mai Ja Yang, Mansi Township, Kachin State, fled to China as a result of the ongoing fighting.
- 16 April: Tatmadaw forces shot and injured a Kachin civilian at a checkpoint near Chyari Dagaw Village, Momauk Township, Kachin State.
- 17 April: Tatmadaw troops fired 105 mm artillery shells on Chyari Bum Village, Momauk Township, Kachin State.

On 10 April, it was reported that regime authorities had closed a road from Man Wein Village, Mansi Township, Kachin State, to the Chinese town of Nandau, complicating efforts of humanitarian groups

Raw timber ban another excuse for heightened militarization

On 1 April, the regime’s ban on raw timber exports came into effect. Regime authorities used the implementation of the ban as an excuse to increase militarization in Kachin and Northern Shan States. On 19 April, the regime Defense Ministry announced that the Tatmadaw was taking action against raw timber smugglers between Kachin State’s China border routes. In April, this mandate translated into Tatmadaw attacks against key KIA positions along the illegal timber supply route, including around Mansi Township, Kachin State and Kutkai Township, Shan State [See above Census: A guise for Tatmadaw to escalate attacks in Kachin and Shan States].

Regime census fails to meet international standards; Rohingya harassment ensues

Following the 26-27 March attacks on aid workers as a result of heightened ethnic tensions against Rohingya in Arakan State [See March 2014 Burma Bulletin], the regime continued to intimidate Rohingya during the census data collection process. Police, Tatmadaw, and immigration officials accompanied census enumerators to Rohingya villages where they took photographs of respondents who said they were Rohingya, verbally abused residents, kicked in doors, and ripped down signs on houses identifying residents. Census enumerators refused to record ‘Rohingya’ as an ethnicity and to continue asking census questions if a person said their race was ‘Rohingya’.

On 22 April, regime Immigration and Population director general Myint Kyaing said the census would be extended until 10 June because 700,000 ‘Bengalis’ had refused to participate in protest for not being able to self-identify as they wished. On 25 April, it was reported that the regime proposed that Muslims in Arakan State who were excluded the first time around can complete the census if they self-identify as ‘Bengali’ or agree to ignore the ethnicity question completely.

On 1 April, the UNFPA said the regime’s broken promise to the UN to conduct the census in accordance with international standards and human rights principles could result in increased tensions in Arakan State and would undermine the credibility of the data collected. On 7 April, UN Special Rapporteur on human rights in Burma Tomás Ojea Quintana said that the regime’s decision not to allow Rohingya to self-identify in the national census meant the population count was not in line with international standards. On 25 April, UN Sec-Gen Ban Ki-moon said the attacks against aid organizations in Akyab [Sittwe] in March “appear to have been aimed at disrupting […] the census”. Burma mourns the passing of U Win Tin

On 21 April, U Win Tin, who was a political prisoner for 19 years and one of the National League for Democracy (NLD)’s founding members, died at age 84 in Rangoon General Hospital due to multiple organ failure. On 23 April, tens of thousands of Win Tin’s supporters from all walks of life, including Buddhist monks, activists, civil society leaders, politicians, journalists, and diplomats attended his funeral service in Rangoon. Many NLD members including Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and NLD patron Tin Oo attended. 88 Generation Peace and Open Society leader Min Ko Naing also attended. Many wore blue shirts in honor of U Win Tin who wore his blue prison shirt in protest against the regime’s continued detention of political prisoners.

U Win Tin was a renowned journalist and outspoken advocate of freedom of expression. He was an unwavering critic of the regime, the ongoing detention of political prisoners, human rights violations, and the Tatmadaw’s political power. Ethnic leaders spoke of his constant commitment to a federal union that would ensure minority groups greater representation in government.

HUMAN RIGHTS

UN Sec-Gen urges Burma to investigate sexual violence

On 25 April, UN Sec-Gen Ban Ki-moon presented his report “Conflict-related sexual violence” to the UN Security Council (UNSC) during an open debate session in New York. The report named Burma as one of 21 countries where conflict-related sexual violence is a serious concern. Ban Ki-moon urged the regime to “fully investigate and respond to” past and current incidents of human rights violations, including sexual violence, and to develop a sexual violence protection and response program.

According to the report, since September 2013, reports of sexual violence had increased in Burma, including reports of the rape of girls as young as seven and reports of Tatmadaw and security forces as perpetrators of sexual violence. Ban Ki-moon said sexual violence was associated with “targeted violence” in Arakan State and with the armed conflict in Kachin and Northern Shan States. He expressed concern for victims of the Rohingya population in IDP camps in Northern Arakan State who have limited access to healthcare facilities familiar with sexual violence case management.

Regime hands down another prison sentence to journalist

In April, the regime continued its efforts to restrict press freedom. On 7 April, a court in Magwe, Magwe Division, sentenced Zaw Pe to one year in prison under charges of trespassing and disturbing a civil servant on duty, after he sought to conduct an interview with a public servant about conflict in Kachin and Northern Shan State. He expressed concern for victims of the Rohingya population in IDP camps in Northern Arakan State who have limited access to healthcare facilities familiar with sexual violence case management.

International media freedom and human rights groups criticized the jailing of Zaw Pe as a serious regression of media freedoms that raised concerns over the credibility of the regime’s commitment to supporting freedom of expression and political reform. On 11 April, several private newspapers in Burma printed black front pages to protest the recent arrests and sentencing of journalists.

More charged and sentenced for protesting

In April, regime authorities continued to charge and sentence activists for protesting.

- 1 April: Regime authorities in Mandalay charged four activists under Article 18 of the Peaceful Gathering and Demonstration Law – Thein Aung Myint, Saw Hla Aung, Kyaw Myo Tun, and Khet Khet Tin – after they had staged a candle-lit protest in Mandalay on 27 March against the regime’s decision to increase electricity rates. Police brutally detained the activists. They were released on bail on 31 March after four days in detention.

- 1 April: Rangoon District Court sentenced activists Nay Myo Zin and Win Cho from local NGO Myanmar Social Development Network, to three months in prison under Article 18 of the Peaceful Gathering and Demonstration Law for organizing a protest in January, which called for farmers’ rights, constitutional reform, and the release of jailed activists.

- 10 April: Authorities in Mandalay arrested two protesters – Zaw Win and Ye Yint Aung – on charges of sedition under Article 505(b) of the Criminal Code for a land plowing protest in Maddaya Township, Mandalay Division on 1 March. They had previously been charged for trespassing and vandalism on 2 March. They were taken into custody in Mandalay’s Obo Prison.

- 26 April: Authorities in Prome, Pegu Division, arrested Mizzima News reporter Yae Khe under Article 18 of the Peaceful Gathering and Demonstration Law for organizing a demonstration that called for greater press freedom and the release of journalists currently imprisoned in Burma.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Daw Suu visits Germany and France

On 9 April, Daw Aung San Suu Kyi embarked on a week-long visit to Germany and France. In both countries, Daw Suu said that Burma was not yet a democracy. Daw Suu called for international support, reiterated the need for constitutional amendments, national reconciliation, and a change of mindset among the former military rulers. She also highlighted the challenges regarding ethnic and communal tensions in Burma, saying that people in Burma needed to “cope with [their] fears and prejudices.”

- 10 April: Daw Suu met with German Chancellor Angela Merkel and German President Joachim Gauck in Berlin.

- 11 April: Daw Suu received the Willy Brandt Prize from Germany’s Social Democrats Party. In her acceptance speech, Daw Aung San Suu Kyi said that Burma was “at a most sensitive, most dangerous time” in the path of its evolution.

- 15 April: In Paris, Daw Suu met with French President François Hollande and French Foreign Minister Laurent Fabius. She said that the fact that President Thein Sein “shows no intention of supporting amendments to the constitution” was a matter of “great concern”, and that if he was

Regime maintains relations with North Korea

On 3 April, a North Korean delegation led by North Korean Foreign Ministry director general Kim Myong Gil arrived in Burma for a four-day visit. On 4 April, the North Korean delegation met regime Deputy FM Thant Kyaw and regime FM Political Department director general San Lwin in Naypyidaw. Details of the meetings remained elusive. State-run newspaper New Light of Myanmar reported that the foreign affairs department officials discussed North Korea-Burma bilateral relations.

Regime officials go to Beijing as Chinese investment in Burma drops

April marked the end of the 2013-14 fiscal year which saw China-Burma trade relations boom. According to the regime Commerce Ministry’s Trade Directorate Director Than Aung Kyaw, 83% of Burma’s total trade in the 2013-14 fiscal year, amounting to US$4.46 billion (4.3 trillion kyat), consisted of cross-border trade with China. Despite booming cross-border trade, Chinese investment in Burma plummeted in 2013, totaling only 5% of China’s 2012 investment and only 1% of China’s 2010 investment into Burma. For the first time in four years, China dropped from the foremost leading investor in Burma to 10th place.

In April, regime officials Vice-President Nyan Tun and National Parliament Speaker Shwe Mann visited Beijing from 7-9 and 8-12 April respectively. On 10 April, Shwe Mann signed an MoU with Chinese National People’s Congress Standing Committee chairman Zhang Dejiang to strengthen ties between the two countries’ legislatures. Zhang said that both legislatures should enact policies to “protect the legitimate rights of investors” and “maintain a sound policy and legal environment” for bilateral trade cooperation.

ECONOMY

Asian Development Bank, World Bank: Inflation to hit 6.6% in 2014-15

On 1 April, Parliament’s electricity price hikes, approved in March [See March 2014 Burma Bulletin], came into effect. The electricity price increase is expected to contribute to rising commodity prices which have continued over the month of April in Burma. On 28 April, it was reported that according to a local price index, basic food prices had increased by about 20% over the month.

The rise in commodity prices was consistent with two reports, “Asian Development Outlook 2014” and “East Asia Pacific Economic Update April 2014: Preserving Stability and Promoting Growth”, released in April by the Asian Development Bank (ADB) and the World Bank respectively. The reports forecasted that rising inflation in Burma would reach 6.6% in the current 2014-15 fiscal year, due in part to higher electricity prices. The ADB also attributed the rising inflation to the regime’s increase in civil servant wages by about 20,000 kyat (US$20).

Maplecroft: Vested interests in natural resources will harm business environment

In April, two key reports warned that both the Tatmadaw and ethnic armed groups continued to be involved in the illegal timber trade. Maplecroft’s country risk report on Burma titled “Myanmar: First census since 1983 may spur ethnic tensions and violence,” and the International Crisis Group (ICG)’s “Myanmar’s Military: Back to the Barracks?” noted that both the Tatmadaw and ethnic armed groups used illegal income generation activities to financially support their operations. The ICG report warned that maintaining these activities could lead to tensions and clashes over access to resources. Maplecroft also said that the two groups’ vested interest in illegal trading activities could threaten Burma’s business environment.
