• The regime uses the antiquated and oppressive 1923 Official Secrets Act to detain four journalists who reported on a weapons factory.

• The regime Information Ministry imposes visa restrictions on foreign journalists working at former exile media groups.

• Naypyidaw takes no further action on the reported deaths and injuries of Rohingya in Arakan State’s Du Chee Yar Tan Village after the regime-Human Rights Commission fails to properly investigate the violence that began on 9 January.

• At President Thein Sein’s request, authorities interrogate USDP People’s Assembly MP Shwe Maung, for making allegations about police involvement in the 28 January fire in Du Chee Yar Tan.

• The regime suspends Médecins Sans Frontières (MSF) operations in apparent retaliation for the humanitarian organization’s confirmation that there were casualties in the violence at Du Chee Yar Tan.

• President Thein Sein directs Parliament to discuss the notorious proposal to restrict interfaith marriage.

• The upcoming national census draws resistance from ethnic groups and civil society.

• Parliament forms another constitutional review committee, to carry forward the work of the first committee formed seven months earlier (which made no progress on key reforms).

• Parliament fails to approve significant amendments on the Peaceful Gathering and Demonstration law.

• No nationwide ceasefire talks occur in February, but Tatmadaw intensifies military offensives against the KIA in Kachin State, and continues against the SSA-S and the TNLA in Shan State.

• Local police detain eight people in Sagaing Division for protesting against land confiscation for the Monywa (Letpadaung) copper mine project.

• Burma fails to improve its rating with the Financial Action Task Force on money Laundering (FATF) despite rushing ahead with legislation.

• Tomás Ojea Quintana makes his final visit as UN Special Rapporteur on human rights to Burma, expressing concern over challenges which “could jeopardize the entire reform process.”

• Thailand traffics displaced Rohingya while Bangladesh pushes them back to Burma.
Regime detains, prosecutes four journalists

In February, the regime filed criminal charges against four journalists under the outdated 1923 Official Secrets Act, in connection with the publication of a piece of investigative journalism. On 31 January, police from Pauk Township, Magwe Division, arrested Unity Weekly journal reporter Lu Maw Naing for the publication of an article on 25 January which claimed that the military had a secret chemical weapons factory in Pauk Township, Magwe Division. On 1 February, police officers arrested Unity Weekly CEO Tint San and three more Unity Weekly journalists, Yarzar Oo, Paing Thet Kyaw, and Sithu Soe on the same charges. Police held them for questioning in Rangoon’s Insein Prison. The regime denied the five their right of access to a lawyer for several days. On 14 February, the four journalists and CEO stood trial in Pakokku District Court, Magwe Division. They could face up to 14 years in jail if convicted.

The arrest and detention of the five media workers sparked condemnation from local and international media organizations, who called for their immediate release.

Regime restricts visas for foreign journalist, bans writers from literary talks

On 13 February, it was reported that since early February, the regime Information Ministry had imposed visa restrictions on foreign journalists who worked at former exile media groups, including Irrawaddy and Democratic Voice of Burma.

On 13 February, President Thein Sein’s spokesman Ye Htut said that foreign journalists providing “occasional news coverage” in Burma would now only be granted visas of up to one month, as opposed to the three-month visas they were previously granted. The changes in visa regulations come just weeks after foreign news outlets such as AP, Irrawaddy, Voice of America, Myanmar Times, and Mizzima News reported on the killing of at least 48 Muslim Rohingya in Du Chee Yar Tan Village, Maungdaw Township, Arakan State [See January 2014 Burma Bulletin].

The regime and extremist Buddhist monks restricted freedom of speech at several events across Burma in February.

• 4 February: A township administration officer banned writers Nyi Pu Kalay, Maung Sein Win, and U Phone from speaking publicly at a literary event in Pyawbwe Township, Mandalay Division.
• 12 February: Thirty monks from the Patriotic Burmese Monks Union (PBMU) forced the cancellation of a literary function organized by the NLD in Rangoon’s North Okkalapa Township,

Burma’s press reforms “out of steam”

On 12 February, Reporters Sans Frontières (RSF) released its “World Press Freedom Index 2014,” which ranked Burma 145th out of 180 countries.14 Despite a slight improvement from its rank of 151st out of 179 in 2013, the report said Burma’s reforms had “run out of steam” and that the regime failed to implement any media legislation that complies with international standards.15

INSIDE BURMA

Regime investigations into Du Chee Yar Tan Village inadequate

In February, the regime continued to conduct contrived and biased investigations into the violence that began on 9 January in Du Chee Yar Tan Village, Maungdaw Township, Arakan State [See January 2013 Burma Bulletin].

On 3 February, a four-member team from the regime Human Rights Commission (HRC) conducted a five-day fact-finding mission to the area in response to pressure from the international community.16 On 14 February, the HRC issued a post-mission statement that concluded that reports of violence in Du Chee Yar Tan Village were “unverifiable and unconfirmed”.17

The commission said that there was no evidence to confirm the reported deaths of 48 Rohingya or that Médecins Sans Frontières (MSF) had treated 22 people injured in the violence.18 The commission also came to the bizarre conclusion that Arakan police should be supplied with better weapons.19

On 6 February, President Thein Sein issued an order for a new 10-member investigatory commission to selectively probe the violence in Du Chee Yar Tan Village.20 The presidential order limited the commission’s inquiry to the death of police Sgt Aung Kyaw and the “false and groundless reports” surrounding a fire that broke out in Du Chee Yar Tan Village on 28 January.21 President Thein Sein did not task the new commission with investigating the reports of lethal violence against Rohingya.22 On 15 February, the 10-member commission began a six-day investigation, touring villages in the area and meeting with UN and NGO representatives.23 The commission was expected to report its findings on 28 February, however no reports appeared in local media as of 1 March.24

On 19 February, UN Special Rapporteur on human rights in Burma Tomás Ojea Quintana said the regime’s investigations had “failed to satisfactorily address” the allegations of violence in Du Chee Yar Tan Village. He also warned that if President Thein Sein’s new investigative commission did not carry out a credible investigation, he would “urge the involvement” of the UN Human Rights Council to “uncover the truth of what happened” and hold human rights violators accountable.

Regime takes punitive action, suspends MSF activities in Burma

The regime took punitive action against Médecins Sans Frontières (MSF) who discredited the regime’s version of the violence in Du Chee Yar Tan Village, Maungdaw Township, Arakan State. MSF stood by their report that they had treated 22 injured people in the days following the violence.

On 27 February, MSF received orders from Arakan State authorities to cease operations in Arakan State. In compliance, on 28 February, MSF closed all their HIV/AIDS clinics in Rangoon Division and Arakan, Shan, and Kachin States for the first time in MSF’s history in Burma.

On 28 February, President Thein Sein’s spokesman Ye Htut said MSF were being suspended because their MoU to operate in Burma expired in January 2013, and that the decision was based on the fact that MSF broke their agreement with the regime by employing more foreign staff than was allowed, providing more than basic health care – including maternity clinics in Arakan State, and giving Rohingya “preferential treatment”. Ye Htut also said that MSF’s activities were “fueling tensions” and were detrimental to the “rule of law” and “regional stability,” referencing MSF’s “unsupported” reports that it treated injured people following the violence in Du Chee Yar Tan Village.

On 27 February, MSF Head of Mission in Burma Peter Paul de Groote confirmed that MSF is currently in negotiations with regime Health Ministry to finalize a new MoU.

Arakan State MP to be “held responsible” for defamation of the state

On 4 February, upon a request from President Thein Sein, police in Naypyidaw interrogated Rohingya USDP People’s Assembly MP Shwe Maung aka Abdu Rawze for suggesting the complicity of police in a fire that broke out in Du Chee Yar Tan Village on 28 January. After the fire broke out, USDP People’s Assembly MP Shwe Maung reported that residents of Du Chee Yar Tan Village, Maungdaw Township, Arakan State had seen police setting fire to their homes.

On 5 February, President Thein Sein’s spokesman Ye Htut said Shwe Maung may be “held responsible for defamation and provoking tension” between Buddhist Rakhine and Muslim Rohingya.

• 11 February: The National Assembly approved the Anti-Money Laundering Bill.38 The bill was prioritized ahead of the 12-14 February Financial Action Task Force (FATF) meeting in Paris [See January 2013 Burma Bulletin].

• 14 February: The People’s Assembly approved the Association Bill [See November 2013 Burma Bulletin].39 This was the second draft of the bill which was introduced to the People’s Assembly in November 2013, and replaced a previous version drafted by the regime Home Affairs Ministry [See November 2013 Burma Bulletin].

• 19 February: People’s Assembly USDP MP Aung Ko introduced new amendments to the bill introduced in November 2013 to amend the Peaceful Gathering and Demonstration Law [See November 2013 Burma Bulletin].40 However, the new amendments only reduced the jail term for violations of Article 18 of the law from one year to six months and retained the requirement for protest applications, adding that an application can be rejected on “reasonable” grounds.41

The passage of the Anti-Money Laundering Bill was prioritized and pushed through in order to improve Burma’s listing by the FATF. However, this failed to convince the FATF, who said that Burma had made insufficient progress in implementing its action plan and still had deficiencies in combating money laundering and financing terrorism.42

Thein Sein expedites enactment of draft proposal restricting interfaith marriage

In February, the regime continued to promote the extremist Buddhist anti-Muslim agenda, giving their support to a draft proposal restricting interfaith marriage [See June 2013 Burma Bulletin] spearheaded by the newly-formed extremist Buddhist Organization for the Protection of National Race and Religion (OPNRR).43 On 25 February, President Thein Sein sent a letter to National Parliament Speaker Shwe Mann urging National Parliament MPs to discuss it, in an attempt to expedite the enactment of the discriminatory proposal.44

On 27 February, National Parliament Speaker Shwe Mann sent sections of the draft proposal to relevant ministries to be rewritten as bills, according to standard procedure, before submission to Parliament.45

Another constitutional review committee formed

Seven months since the formation of the 109-member constitutional review committee in July 2013 [See July 2013 Burma Bulletin], the USDP-dominated Parliament and commissions have failed to make progress in regard to important constitutional amendments. On 3 February, the National Parliament approved the formation of a new 31-member parliamentary committee tasked with reviewing the compilation of suggested amendments of the 109-member constitutional review committee.46
The first committee submitted its report to Parliament on 31 January.\(^{47}\) [See January 2013 Burma Bulletin]. The new 31-member committee will submit a separate report to Parliament with recommendations for constitutional amendments.\(^{58}\) The committee, made up of 11 USDP MPs and seven military MPs, included only two NLD MPs and only a handful of MPs from ethnic parties.\(^{49}\)

Tatmadaw offensives intensify against KIA

On 6 February, it was reported that no nationwide ceasefire talks would take place between the regime andethnic armed groups until March as ethnic groups need more time to prepare.\(^{50}\) Meanwhile, Tatmadaw troops increased military offensives against the Kachin Independence Army (KIA) in Kachin and Northern Shan States.\(^{51}\)

National census brings criticism and division

The upcoming national census, scheduled for 30 March to 10 April, continued to draw resistance and criticism from ethnic groups, individuals, and civil society organizations. They warned that the census could have political repercussions because of the categorization methodology.72 The constitution and election laws only provide local government representation for ethnic groups that meet certain population limits, causing some groups to worry they will be assimilated into others and therefore be denied identity and political representation.73 In addition, analysts voiced concern that the 1983 census underreported the number of Muslims in Burma, so the results of the current census may show a perceived threefold increase, which could confirm the radical idea that Burma is being overrun by Muslims and fuel violence against them.74 The groups who voiced concern over the census included: Transnational Institute (TNI), ICG, and Burma Campaign UK.75

- 2 February: The Nationalities Brotherhood Federation (NBF) released a statement urging the regime to review its census procedures.76 The NBF warned that the census classification of ethnic groups and sub-groups could lead to “disintegration of unity among ethnic nationalities.”77

The regime responded with indifference, refusing to compromise.83 On 10 February, at a press conference in Rangoon, regime Immigration and Population Minister Khin Yi said the census would be held based on international standards.84 Khin Yi also said that while people would be allowed to report themselves as ‘Rohingya’ they would not be recognized citizens.85 On 27 February representatives from 10 ethnic organizations met with Khin Yi and agreed to wait until after the census was held to voice their concerns about ethnic group categorization.86

Regime authorities charge, detain, and arrest anti-land confiscation protestors

The regime continued to charge, detain, and arrest activists protesting against land confiscation.

• 3 February: Local authorities charged four organizers of a land dispute protest under Article 18 of the Peaceful Gathering and Demonstration Law in Myingyan Township, Mandalay Division.87

• 5 February: About 30 residents demonstrated in a bid to stop nearly 1,000 police and staff from China’s Wanbao mining company from expanding fences onto land that had not been confiscated for the expansion of the Monywa (Letpadaung) copper mine in Salingyi Township, Sagaing Division.88 This led to a confrontation between police and protesters.89 Local police temporarily detained protesters Thwe Thwe Win, Ma Sein, Ye Cho, Ar No, Myint Naing Win, Thaik Tun Shwe, Phyu Phyu Win, and Hse Tin.90

UN: “Serious challenges” could jeopardize Burma’s reform process

On 13 February, Tomás Ojea Quintana arrived in Rangoon for a six-day visit to the country, his final mission as UN Special Rapporteur on human rights in Burma.96 Ojea Quintana traveled to Akyab [Sittwe] in Arakan State; Myitkyina and Laiza in Kachin State; Thilawa Special Economic Zone in Rangoon Division; and the Monywa copper mine in Sagaing Division.97 In Naypyidaw, the Special Rapporteur met with various ministers and officials, Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, and other MPs.98 In Rangoon, he met activists and civil society organizations, and two political prisoners in Insein Prison.99

Members of the Buddhist Rakhine community harassed Ojea Quintana during his visit. On 14 February, Rakhine residents in Akyab, Arakan State, demonstrated against his visit.100 Protesters accused the Special Rapporteur of bias in favor of Rohingya in his reports and demanded his departure.101

On 19 February, Ojea Quintana issued a statement at Rangoon International Airport before departing the country at the end of his visit.102 The statement said that there were a number of challenges, such as the situation in Arakan State, which if left unaddressed could jeopardize Burma’s entire reform process.103 He highlighted the following issues of concern:

- The military continued to have a “prevailing role” in state institutions.
- The judiciary lacked independence.
- The investigation into the Du Chee Yar Tan violence in Arakan State failed to comply with international standards as it was neither credible nor independent.
- The regime had not yet secured ceasefire and political agreements with all ethnic armed groups.
- The demands of ethnic groups had not yet been addressed in regards to the constitution.
- The Peaceful Gathering and Demonstration Law, Association Law, and Printing and Publishing Law were not in line with international human rights standards.
- The regime had not addressed the issues of seized land, forced relocation, loss of livelihood, and health problems caused by the Monywa copper mine.
