Tatmadaw troops launch a major offensive against the Myanmar National Democratic Alliance Army (MNDAA) in Kokang Self-Administered Zone, Shan State.

The Tatmadaw offensive in Kokang Self-Administered Zone results in the regime declaring a state of emergency and displaces 40,000-50,000 civilians, who seek refuge in China. Two Myanmar Red Cross convoys are attacked during the conflict, sparking international condemnation.

Tatmadaw troops continue attacks and civilian abuse in Kachin and Shan States.

Four armed groups sign a preliminary peace agreement on Burma’s 68th Union Day, excluding the United Nationalities Federal Council (UNFC).

Students around the country protest against the National Education Law. Following negotiations, the regime pledges to amend the law according to student demands.

The National Assembly approves the Population Control Bill, which threatens to restrict women’s reproductive rights.

Rohingya and other minorities will lose voting rights after President Thein Sein revokes their temporary ID cards. Regime authorities continue to commit abuses against Rohingya.

A court in Rangoon’s Kyauktada Township sentences 14 activists from Michaungkan Village to six months in prison each under Article 18 of the Peaceful Gathering and Demonstration Law and Articles 143 and 341 of the Criminal Code.

KEY STORY

Tatmadaw launches attacks on Kokang, displaces 40,000-50,000

In February, Tatmadaw troops launched air strikes and ground attacks on the Myanmar National Democratic Alliance Army (MNDAA) in Kokang Self-Administered Zone, Shan State. This was the first such offensive since August 2009, when the Tatmadaw attacked the MNDAA and ousted its Chairman Peng Jiasheng.¹ [See August 2009 Burma Bulletin] The most recent attacks followed reports of Peng Jiasheng’s return to the MNDAA after several years in China.²

As of 23 February, the offensive had driven 40,000-50,000 refugees across the border into Yunnan Province, China.22 Another 4,500 displaced civilians sought shelter in Lashio, Shan State.23 On 23 February, Laogai Township residents reported that Tatmadaw troops had killed over 100 Kokang civilians.24 On the same day, unidentified assailants attacked an eight-vehicle convoy carrying 48 female inmates from Laogai Prison to Lashio, Shan State, injuring 44 prisoners and two others.25

Regime Information Minister Ye Htut alleged that groups in China had provided arms, rations, and medical support to MNDAA forces, while China repeatedly denied involvement in the fighting.26

Attacks on Red Cross convoys draw international condemnation

On 17 and 21 February, in the midst of the fighting in Kokang Self-Administered Zone, Shan State, unidentified assailants attacked two Myanmar Red Cross convoys, injuring three Myanmar Red Cross volunteers, a journalist, and three others.27

International actors including Amnesty International and Physicians for Human Rights (PHR) condemned the attacks, saying they were a violation of international humanitarian law and could amount to war crimes.28 UN Resident and Humanitarian Coordinator in Burma Renata Dessallien, the United States, and the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) called on all parties in the conflict to guarantee the safety and security of humanitarian staff.29 Both the regime and the Myanmar National Democratic Alliance Army (MNDAA) denied responsibility for the attacks.30

Four ethnic armed groups sign preliminary peace deal

After ethnic armed groups resisted regime efforts to pressure them into signing the nationwide ceasefire agreement on 12 February, Burma’s 68th Union Day, President Thein Sein instead signed a preliminary peace agreement in Naypyidaw with representatives from the Karen National Union (KNU), the Democratic Karen Benevolent Army (DKBA), the Karen National Union/Karen National Liberation Army Peace Council (KNU/KNLA Peace Council), and the Restoration Council of Shan State/Shan State Army-South (RCSS/SSA-S).45

United Nationalities Federal Council (UNFC) members did not attend the ceremony after the regime refused to issue a joint invitation for the bloc.46 Previously on 18 January, UNFC had proposed that the 12 February agreement should establish a federal union, including political guarantees for the ethnic groups.47 However, the regime dismissed the proposal.48

Student protests extract commitment to revise National Education Law

In February, as students marched across the country to demand changes to the National Education Law, the regime agreed to amend the law after negotiations with student leaders and education advocates.

On 1 February, representatives from the regime, the National Parliament, the National Network for Education Reform (NNER), and student groups met in Rangoon to discuss amendments to the National Education Law. At the next scheduled meeting in Naypyidaw on 3 February, however, the regime abruptly postponed negotiations.

Meanwhile, student marches to Rangoon, which began in January [See January 2015 Burma Bulletin] from Mandalay and Tenasserim Divisions, continued to call for the regime to negotiate over changes to the law. Additional protests took place around the country. [See box National Education Law protests]

On 11 February, negotiations resumed in Rangoon, where regime representatives agreed in principle to the students’ 11 demands for changes to the National Education Law, including ensuring the freedom to form student unions, mother-tongue language instruction in ethnic areas, greater autonomy for universities, and the allocation of 20% of the national budget to education. Following more negotiations on 14 and 15 February, the regime submitted to the National Parliament on 16 February a bill, drafted by the NNER, which would amend the National Education Law in accordance with the students’ demands.

Students around the country subsequently suspended their marches, though those marching from Mandalay vowed to resume protests if Parliament did not approve the bill by 28 February.

Thein Sein removes voting rights for temporary ID card holders

On 2 February, the National Parliament approved, by a vote of 328 to 79 with 19 abstentions, a bill granting temporary ID card holders – which include many Muslim Rohingya – the right to vote in a planned referendum on constitutional amendments.74 [See above, Parliament’s 12th session continues]

Following a protest in Rangoon against the law’s approval, on 11 February, President Thein Sein announced that all temporary ID cards would expire on 31 March, effectively overriding the granting of suffrage.75 The following day, regime border police began seizing temporary ID cards from Rohingya in Maungdaw Township, Arakan State.76 For decades, temporary ID cards have been used to access public services and vote in elections. The expiration and seizure of such cards would deny holders the limited rights they enjoyed and place them at greater threat of arbitrary detention and expulsion.77

On 16 February, the Constitutional Tribunal responded to a petition from National Assembly MPs requesting a ruling on the constitutionality of the law.78 The Tribunal told Parliament that the clause granting suffrage to temporary ID card holders violated Articles 4, 38(a), and 391 of the 2008 constitution.79

Discrimination and abuses against Rohingya continue

Regime authorities also continued to commit serious human rights violations against Rohingya, including harassment, arbitrary detention, and torture.

- 10 February: Regime border police arbitrarily arrested and tortured a Rohingya man in Maungdaw Township, Arakan State.80
- 15 February: Regime border police arbitrarily arrested four Rohingya in Maungdaw Township, Arakan State.81
- 22 February: A local official struck a Rohingya man after he refused to pay a bribe during a ‘data collection’ exercise in Maungdaw Township, Arakan State.82

In addition, high-ranking regime officials continued to make statements that fueled discrimination against Rohingya. On 3 February, the regime Foreign Affairs Ministry issued a press release rejecting the UN Special Rapporteur on human rights in Burma Yanghee Lee’s use of the term “Rohingya” at a 16 January press conference.83

More arbitrary arrests and sentences

In February, the regime continued punitive measures against human rights defenders.

To date, no investigation into his daughter’s death has been conducted.

• 18 February: A court in Rangoon’s Kyauktada Township sentenced 14 activists, including 11 women, to six months in prison each under Article 18 of the Peaceful Gathering and Demonstration Law and Articles 143 and 341 of the Criminal Code. Authorities arrested them in December 2014 for protesting in front of Rangoon City Hall against the confiscation of their land in Michaungkan Village, Thingangyun Township, Rangoon Division. [See December 2014 Burma Bulletin]

• 26 February: Police in Rangoon raided and destroyed a protest camp next to Maha Bandoola Park and arrested 14 activists for protesting against the confiscation of their land in Michaungkan Village, Thingangyun Township, Rangoon Division. Kyauktada and Latha Township Courts charged the activists under Article 18 of the Peaceful Gathering and Demonstration Law and Article 68 of the Municipal Act. The 14 were released on bail later in the day.

Burma’s press still restricted

In February, Burma’s press freedom continued to deteriorate.

• 12 February: Reporters Sans Frontières (RSF) released its “2015 World Press Freedom Index,” which ranked Burma 144th out of 180 countries surveyed, one place higher than its 2014 ranking.

• 13 February: Special Branch police apprehended two Spanish photojournalists after they had met with student protesters on 12 February in Irrawaddy Division. On 14 February, immigration officials deported the photojournalists from Burma for covering student protests against the National Education Law in Irrawaddy Division while on tourist visas.

• 28 February: Police in Monywa, Sagaing Division, arrested and charged freelance photojournalist Aung Nay Myo under the 1950 Emergency Provisions Act for a satirical Facebook post that credited President Thein Sein and former SPDC Chairman Sr Gen Than Shwe as the directors of a war film on a 1971 battle between Tatmadaw troops and Shan communist fighters. Aung Nay Myo could face up to seven years in prison if convicted.

Mining companies complicit in human rights abuse: Amnesty International

On 10 February, Amnesty International released its report “Open for Business? Corporate Crime and Abuses at Myanmar Copper Mine.” The report documented how Canadian and Chinese mining firms financially benefited from serious human rights abuses including forced evictions and authorities’ excessive use of force to quell protests against the Monywa copper mine projects in Sagaing Division. The report also found that:

- Chinese company Wanbao was directly involved in forced evictions and colluded with regime authorities by providing bulldozers to destroy crops.
- Canadian company Ivanhoe Mines was involved, through its Monywa investment, in the sale of copper to the SPDC for more than a decade while economic sanctions were still in force.

On the same day as the report’s release, regime police clashed with local protesters at the Letpadaung (Monywa) copper mine project site in Salingyi Township, Sagaing Division, when protesters tried to stop Wanbao bulldozers from entering land that had been confiscated for the project. At least nine people were injured as a result.95

UN High Commissioner for Human Rights: Burma “headed in the wrong direction”

On 25 February, UN High Commissioner for Human Rights Zeid Ra’ad Al Hussein issued a statement in which he warned that Burma seemed “headed in the wrong direction.” The statement voiced concern about the jailing of peaceful protesters and media workers, the continued persecution of Muslim Rohingya, and discriminatory laws targeting religious minorities.100

ECONOMY

Police injure striking factory workers demanding higher pay

On 20 February, police arrested about 30 workers and injured several others while attempting to disperse a strike in Rangoon’s Shwepyithar Industrial Zone.101 The crackdown followed a series of strikes, which began on 28 January, of about 3,000 workers from five factories in Rangoon’s Shwepyithar and Hlaing Tharyar Townships, who were demanding higher pay and better working conditions.102

Following negotiations that yielded pay increases, most workers had returned to their jobs by 26 February.103 However, around 100 continued to protest, calling for further wage increases and the release of two protesters charged under Article 505(b) of the Criminal Code and detained in Insein Prison.104
Offshore oil exploration underway

In February, the regime signed new contracts and granted several companies permits for exploration of offshore oil blocks:

- 5 February: In Naypyidaw, state-owned Myanma Oil and Gas Enterprise (MOGE) signed exploration and production sharing contracts with Royal Dutch Shell and its Japanese partner Mitsui Oil Exploration for three deep-water offshore blocks: AD9 and AD11 in the Bay of Bengal and MD5 in the Andaman Sea.\(^{105}\)
- 5 February: It was reported that Myanmar Investment Commission (MIC) had issued a permit for a joint venture between Norwegian company Statoil and US company ConocoPhillips to explore oil and natural gas at offshore block AD10 in the Bay of Bengal.\(^{106}\)
- 5 February: It was reported that MIC had issued a permit for a joint venture between US company Chevron’s subsidiary Unocal and Burmese company Royal Marine Engineering to explore oil and natural gas at offshore block A5 in the Bay of Bengal.\(^{107}\)
- 9 February: It was reported that MOGE had issued a permit to UK company Ophir Energy to explore offshore block AD3 in the Bay of Bengal.\(^{108}\)
