KEY STORY: SITUATION WORSENS FOR ROHINGYA

United Nations: Rohingya may be victims of crimes against humanity

On 20 June, the UN issued a report stating that human rights violations targeting the Rohingya community may amount to crimes against humanity.¹ The report said that Rohingya have been deprived of nationality, undergone systematic discrimination and severe restrictions on movements, and they have also suffered from executions and torture.²

On 16 June, the Ministry of Information issued a letter instructing state-run media to refer to 'Rohingya' as the 'Muslim community in Rakhine' during a visit to the country by the UN's special envoy on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, Yanghee Lee.³ Aung San Suu Kyi told the UN Special Rapporteur on Human Rights that the government will avoid using the term "Rohingya" to describe a persecuted Muslim minority explaining that the term is "controversial" and should be avoided according to Aung Lin, Permanent Secretary at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.⁴

Meanwhile, on 22 June, the European Union said it would give the Burmese Government "space" when it comes to resolving the Rohingya situation, and would respect the call by the government to avoid using the 'Rohingya' term.⁵ Roland Kobia, the EU ambassador to Burma/Myanmar, said "we understand that the term 'Rohingya' is emotionally charged in Myanmar and we have heard the call of the government to avoid creating tension by using polarizing terminology." In response, Wai Wai Nu, a prominent Rohingya activist from Women Peace Network Arakan, said "the government should address the targeted persecution and discrimination against minorities and ensure protection of their rights by respecting their ethnicity, identity and name."⁶

Controversial green card program ramps up

On 16 June, it was reported that since 7 June, immigration officials gave out more than 1,000 new National Verification Cards (NVC), otherwise known as 'green cards', in Arakan/Rakhine State.⁷ The NVC started in June 2015, after all white cards were returned, as part of the citizenship verification process introduced under the 2014 Rakhine State Action Plan, which was stalled in 2015, and then reactivated on 7 June under the "100-day plan".⁸

After the previous government abolished 'white cards' for Rohingya in 2015, it introduced 'green cards' in exchange, which allowed Rohingya access to basic services, as long as they identified themselves as 'Bengali'.⁹ Green card holders could reapply for citizenship, and the validity of the green card is for two years.

On 17 June 2015, media reported that several factors had complicated the 'citizenship' program, including delays in reclaiming all white cards and questions about what would be required of the Rohingya community to apply for citizenship on the basis of the new identification cards.¹⁰ According to Khin Soe, an immigration officer in the state capital Sittwe, holders of green cards were able to stay in Burma indefinitely without applying for naturalized citizenship, by repeatedly filing for extensions.¹¹

On 9 June, the director of the Immigration and National Registration Department, Win Lwin, said that distribution of NVCs in Ponnagyun was met with opposition from villagers who refused to provide information because they are not allowed to mention their race and religion, including self-identifying as Rohingya, in order to qualify for the national identification cards.¹² Village administrator, Maung Ni said they would participate in the census once the NVCs included such information.¹³ On the same day, Win Lwin said that those who refused to take part in the identity card process have been given another week to reconsider.¹⁴

‘Thitsar’ program: faith-based segregation of school children?

On 9 June, Deputy Head of Rakhine State Immigration Department, Ko Ko Latt, confirmed that citizenship scrutiny certificates had already been issued to 67,746 students in 1,225 schools under its ‘Thitsar’ 100-day plan.¹⁵ ‘Thitsar cards’, meaning ‘faith cards’ in the Burmese language, are being given to students from the age of 10 and above in schools in Rakhine State - where there are 3,143 schools - in cooperation with regional immigration departments and school heads in respective townships.¹⁶ The program has so far reached the townships of Sittwe, Mrauk-U, Maungdaw, Kyaukphyu and Thandwe, places where lethal anti-Muslim violence has been documented since 2012. No known Rohingya children are included in this scheme, effectively segregating children based on their religious faith from an early age.¹⁷

Formation of Central Committee on Implementation of Peace, Stability and Development of Rakhine State

On 1 June, it was reported Burma’s president Htin Kyaw had established a new high-level committee to handle Rakhine State affairs. The 27-member Rakhine State Peace, Stability and Development Committee was officially formed on 30 May and is headed by State Counsellor Aung San Suu Kyi, who told the UN Special Rapporteur on Human Rights that the government would continue to avoid using the term “Rohingya” to describe a persecuted Muslim minority in Rakhine State [see Human Rights section]. Union Minister for Border Affairs and the Rakhine State Chief Minister are co-vice chairs of the committee, while the General Administration Department and the Deputy Minister for Border Affairs Head of Rakhine State act as secretary and joint secretary respectively.¹⁸

Ma Ba Tha monk denounces anti-Rohingya protest

Ashin Kawthala, Chairperson of the Magwe Division chapter of the Ma Ba Tha, has criticized the 13 June anti-Rohingya protest that took place in Pakokku Township, Magwe Division. The monk accused the 1,000 protestors of trying to “whip up hatred” although he also stated he had no problem with the message conveyed.¹⁹

DEMOCRACY AND GOVERNANCE

Peaceful Assembly and Procession Law amended

On 1 June, it was reported that the Upper House approved new amendments to the Peaceful Assembly and Procession Bill. The most significant changes to the bill include a safeguard against multiple charges for a single procession across multiple townships, lowered penalties, and that organizers merely need to notify authorities in advance instead of seeking official permission.²⁰

ETHNIC AFFAIRS & CONFLICT

Authorities ban release of torture report

On 25 June, the Rangoon/Yangon Division Government banned the release of a report on torture in ethnic conflict areas by the Ta’ang Women’s Organisation (TWO) at the last minute, without explanation.³⁹ The report alleges that the Tatmadaw had committed war crimes against ethnic Ta’ang

Lway Poe Nyein, a spokesperson for TWO said “we have the evidence for the allegations in the report - it highlighted the Burmese army’s systematic and widespread use of torture, alleging that this is a war crime, but the government decided to block us since it is concerning the Tatmadaw.” Khin Ohmar, coordinator of the Burma Partnership, criticized the ban saying it “... gave us a clear signal that under the current NLD government, freedom of expression is still restricted”.⁴⁰

Second ‘Panglong Conference’ to take place in August

On 28 June, State Counsellor Aung San Suu Kyi and representatives of eight ethnic armed organizations (EAOs) that signed last year’s Nationwide Ceasefire Agreement (NCA) confirmed that peace talks, dubbed the second ‘Panglong Conference’, would take place no later than the last week of August.⁴¹

Throughout June, a Burmese Government peace delegation has been reaching out to non-signatories of the NCA to take part in this conference:

- 3 June: The United Nationalities Federal Council’s (UNFC), an alliance of armed ethnic groups, agreed to join the conference.⁴²
- 6 June: The United Wa State Army (UWSA) and the Myanmar National Democratic Alliance Army (MNDAA) agreed to join the convening committee of the conference.⁴³
- 8 June: The Restoration Council of Shan State (RCSS), Shan State Progress Party (SSPP), Kachin Independence Organization (KIO) and the Chin National Front (CNF) said they would support the conference plans.⁴⁴

On 10 June, delegates from the government and seven EAOs met at the National Reconciliation and Peace Centre in Rangoon/Yangon to discuss the organization of the conference, with a focus on how to amend the Framework for Political Dialogue within the structure of the NCA. Dr Tin Myo Win, chair of the Second Subcommittee for Preparation of the 21st Century Panglong Conference, said that the talks focused on inviting non-signatories to the NCA to the conference.⁴⁵

On 29 June, Burma/Myanmar’s military commander-in-chief, Senior General Min Aung Hlaing also confirmed that the military will “fully cooperate” with negotiators and EAOs to ensure the success of the peace conference.⁴⁶

Armed conflict: clashes, civilian abuse

On 9 June, to mark five years since the resumption of war in Kachin State, 130 community-based and international organizations issued a statement urging the military and government to “end the endemic culture of impunity once and for all.”⁴⁷

In June, human rights violations continued amidst armed conflicts in Shan and Kachin states:

- 1 June: A 22 year old villager died after stepping on a land mine near Namhkam Township, Shan State.⁴⁸
- 3 June: Two ethnic Ta’ang villagers were murdered in an area where armed hostilities escalated near Namkham Township, Shan State.⁴⁹

- 20 June: A university student was shot dead by the Tatmadaw in Myitkyina, Kachin State, after an altercation where the soldiers said they were acting in self defense.⁵¹
- 21 June: The Arakan Liberation Army (ALA) claimed they were attacked by the Arakan Army (AA) and that one of its fighters was missing in action, although the AA denied that any attack took place.⁵²
- 25 June: Tatmadaw soldiers from Division 33 arrested five villagers in Lashio Township, Shan State, with news later reporting that two of the villagers had been killed.⁵³
- 29 June: Five villagers from Lashio Township, Shan State, were found dead close to a Tatmadaw base.⁵⁴

HUMAN RIGHTS

Burma named one of world's worst countries for human trafficking

On 30 June, the US State Department named Burma as one of the world's worst human trafficking offenders, demoting the country from the Tier 2 watch list to a Tier 3 country, citing the use of child soldiers and forced labor as the reason behind the decision.⁵⁵ The downgrading increases the possibility of sanctions by the US Government.⁵⁶

Lieutenant Colonel Thet Naung, national head of the police Anti-Human Trafficking Team, in response said "the U.S. pointed out some points that we police have been working on. It also pointed out the child soldier issue, which the military is working on."⁵⁷

Gambira released but not without further threat

On 1 July, Gambira, one of the Buddhist monks best known for leading the 2007 Saffron Revolution, was finally released following a 6-month prison sentence for allegedly crossing the Thai/Burmese border illegally as he returned to the country to apply for a new passport.⁵⁸ On 27 June, in the week leading up to his scheduled release, Gambira was transferred to Insein Prison in Rangoon/Yangon and threatened with a trespassing charge backdated to 2012. The charge was later dropped.⁵⁹

BBC Reporter jailed

On 6 June, BBC Burmese-language service reporter Nay Myo Lin was sentenced to three months of hard labor after the Chan Mya Tharsi Township Court convicted him under section 332 of the penal code for attacking a police officer during student protests in Mandalay, on 27 March 2015.⁶⁰ Nay Myo Lin accused the police officer of knocking a man off a motorbike, and his defense lawyer, Thein Than Oo, told Reuters that a widely circulated witness video showed this was the case.⁶¹ The reporter added that he "didn't mean to hurt that policeman" and that he was trying to "give protection to a citizen who was being treated unjustly."⁶² His lawyer confirmed an appeal against the sentence will be submitted.⁶³

Media organizations have criticized the verdict: Burma News International called for a review of the case and the Foreign Correspondents Club of Myanmar said the sentence "could tarnish the image of the new civilian government."⁶⁴ The BBC said it would support Nay Myo Lin's appeal.⁶⁵

Mosque Destroyed in Bago Division as tensions escalate

On 23 June, a group of men destroyed a mosque in Thayethamein Village, Bago Division, damaged homes and injured at least one Muslim man, according to a police spokesman.⁶⁶ The Bago Region Chief Minister, Win Thein, said that the destruction was sparked by a Facebook post about an argument between a Muslim and a Buddhist man. The post led a mob of about 200 Buddhist residents from neighboring villages to destroy the Muslim man's house, and attack neighboring Muslim homes and buildings.⁶⁷

Plan to settle land grab cases within "six months"

On 30 June, the Central Committee on Confiscated Farmlands and Other Lands, chaired by Vice President Henry Van Thio, set out an ambitious plan to settle all land grabbing cases in Burma/Myanmar within "six months" said Naypyidaw Council Chairman Myo Aung⁶⁸ Deputy Minister for Agriculture, Irrigation and Livestock, Tun Win, told media that resolving land disputes was one of the priorities of the new government which "... wishes to give back land to the rightful owners", although this may be difficult in some circumstances where land has already been officially resold.⁶⁹

On 25 June, more than 6,000 acres of land confiscated was returned to their rightful owners in the Irrawaddy Division during a ceremony where 3,166 acres seized by Yuzana Company in Pantanaw Township were returned to 252 farmers while 3,268 acres taken by the Ministry of Industry in Pyapon Township were returned to 72 owners.⁷⁰ Vice President Henry Van Thio, in his Central Committee Chairman role, said the government is making systematic efforts to ensure transparency in order to hand over confiscated lands back to farmers but that in some cases, farmers should wait as the work needs to be carried out in conformity with the existing rules and regulations of the land law. During the ceremony, Irrawaddy Region Chief Minister Mahn Jonny said land rights permits would be granted to the farmers in accordance with the 2012 Farmland Law.⁷¹

NATURAL RESOURCES

Government struggles to reign in illegal logging

The Ministry of Natural Resources and Environment Conservation has declared it is unable to reign in illegal logging. On 30 June, it was reported that Ministry director general Nyi Nyi Kyaw said that most of the illegal logging in Burma took place in Kachin State and Sagaing Region where logs were smuggled to China, but the ministry could not control the situation.⁷² The Ministry has reported that 12,844 tons of illegally logged timber was seized in Myanmar/Burma from the beginning of April until 23 June. The largest seizures were in Sagaing Division, at nearly 3,450 tons, followed by over 2,178 tons in Karenni/Kayah State and 1,406 tons in Pegu/Bago Division.⁷³

Myanmar was listed in 2015 as the third worst country in the world for deforestation, according to the UN Food and Agriculture Organization.⁷⁴

The export of raw timber logs was banned as of 1 April 2014.⁷⁶ In April, Ohn Win told media that a nationwide ban on logging would be imposed by the end of the current fiscal year in March 2017.⁷⁷

Gems Scandal: Officials investigated over missing US$100 million

On 8 June, Win Htein, director general of the Department of Mines under the Ministry of Natural Resources and Environmental Conservation, confirmed that authorities had investigated officials from the Ministry of Mines and the Myanmar Gems and the Jewellery Entrepreneurs Association over the alleged disappearance of nearly US$100 million in funds belonging to the Association.⁷⁸

However, former President Thein Sein and former minister of the President's Office, Soe Thein have been excluded from the investigation despite allegations that US$1.1 million of the funds went to Thein Sein, who is also Union Solidarity and Development Party (USDP) Chairman.⁷⁹

The fund which was established under the Ministry of Mines during the Thein Sein administration, originally held about US$104 million, but had dwindled to less than US$800,000. The original funds came from a one percent tax charged for sales at the Myanmar Jade and Gems Emporium and was supposed to be administered by the Emporium's Central Committee, comprised of officials from the Association and the government.⁸⁰

On 2 June, central executive committee member of the Association, Kyaw Kyaw Oo, alleged that €1 million (more than US$1.1 million) was taken from the association and given to Thein Sein, and another €6 million (more than US$6.5 million) was contributed [to the ex-president's project] by gems traders. Former Minister of Mines, Myint Aung, claimed that the missing funds were used legitimately, including for corporate social responsibility purposes.⁸¹

On 3 June, it was reported that the USDP would sue two weekly newspapers in Burma – the Myanmar Herald and the Messenger, along with other individuals – for defaming former President Thein Sein and the USDP in their coverage of the alleged embezzlement.⁸²

Meanwhile, the Ministry has announced that it has raised the required deposit for traders intending to buy jade at the 53rd Myanmar Gems Emporium which will be held from 24 June to 6 July. The deposit was raised from €10,000 to €50,000 (US$56,000) for foreign traders, and to € 20,000 (US$22,000) for locals. The move was to overcome the problem of foreign traders who made bids on gems but didn't complete their purchases. The 2015 gems emporium netted approximately US$ 62 million in sales.⁸³

The meeting will be covering the fourth and fifth reporting periods from 2008-2015.⁸⁵

Suu Kyi inks deal over migrants with Thailand

On 23 June, State Counsellor and Foreign Affairs Minister Aung San Suu Kyi began a 3-day visit to Thailand to visit migrant workers.⁸⁶ During the visit, a new agreement on Burmese migrant workers was signed, aimed at making it easier for Burmese workers to work legally in Thailand. The agreement which is also meant to improve protections for migrant workers, covers the issuance of identity documents, and shortens the waiting period between expired and new working visas from 3 years to 30 days, allowing Burmese workers to return to work in Thailand much sooner. Burma estimates there at 4 million migrant workers in Thailand, half of whom are documented, while Thailand estimates more than 1.4 million.⁸⁷

During the trip, Thai authorities cancelled a visit on 25 June to the Tham Hin refugee camp in Ratchaburi province, west of Bangkok.⁸⁸ No reason was given for the cancellation.

On 29 June, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs announced that 196 refugees in Thailand, displaced by clashes, would be repatriated to Burma/Myanmar although no timescale was given.⁸⁹ According to the UN Refugee Agency, more than 110,000 refugees from Burma currently live in Thailand with most being ethnic minorities displaced by fighting between ethnic armed groups and the Tatmadaw.⁹⁰
